

ISRIA.com delivers Minute-by-Minute Geopolitical Intelligence

ISRIA

For diplomats, policymakers, international business, the media and military and security personnel, timely geopolitical information is an absolute necessity. Now a global geopolitical monitoring service is making it easier to gather that critical information. In fact, ISRIA.com's service (www.isria.com) actually delivers up-to-the-minute world politics news and open-source intelligence directly to subscribers. "ISRIA.com provides subscribers with a complete monitoring of relevant information dealing with global geopolitics and diplomacy," stated Charles Rault, director of ISRIA. "Our service covers a broad range of topics, from foreign policy to terrorism to national security."

One would be hard-pressed to find a more complete source of that sort of specialized information. ISRIA.com services include the Weekly Letter, which bullet-points the week's diplomatic news, provides an in-depth report on a global hot topic and recaps most strategic news of the week; the Daily Update, an online and e-mailed recap of the day's top international and strategic news; over 120,000 pages of international geopolitical news archives; and the ISRIA.com web site, which is updated around the clock, seven days a week.

Designed to save the user time by highlighting critical information, ISRIA.com rises above the crowd of algorithm-driven data sorting services: it is a true information monitoring and reporting service, sorted and published by professional analysts trained to find and deliver the right information quickly. "ISRIA.com puts up-to-the-minute geopolitical news at the service of our users," Rault explained. "Our service consists of a combination of proprietary information and public domain information, chosen for maximum relevance."
